

ABSTRACT

To adjust for differences in service life among light emissive materials used for respective colors by determining
5 the length of a pixel region in the row direction according to the service lives of the light emissive materials. To allow for material change after completion of the laying out process, a light emitting region is formed such that a margin is ensured in the row or column direction within each pixel 10 region.